LETTER PROM CONSTANTI-

the Government; and thereby allow bankers and sharpers is faiten and grow rich at the expense of the people.

There are two things for which we complain of Congress: First, that they did not be a judicious tax provide for the payment of the increased indebtedness of the Government; and second, that they did not grand against the inflated circulation of irresponsible individuals and corporations. Congress has certainly mistaken the temper, the patrictism and the good sense of the people, or they would not this long have neglected if the inflated circulation and congress will were be able to render a satisfactory account to their constituency.

With regard to the increased circulation of the numerous banks all over the land, we have data before as to justify the statement that the sixteen bundred-banks of the country have increased wher circulation about three-fold since the way, without any increase of their securities. Indeed, some of these securities have been greatly diminished by the decrees did not of their timed of londs. &c. New decrees along a constant respective process of their securities.
